EC wire protest fails

Resident objects to underground cable costs

By PETER ALLEN

EL CERRITO — This city's fledgling underground resistance movement was stopped cold by the City Council Monday night.

An underground resistance movement in El Cerrito?

That's right. And while it lasted, it was rational, civilized, non-violent — and, some would say, totally above-ground.

It consisted of Potrero Avenue rebels who wanted to the city to abolish the underground utility district that

Two years ago, when the district was created by the City Council at the behest of the majority of Potrero Avenue residents, estimates for the hookups had a range from $300 to $1,000, according to Amberg.

Instead, the range is from $450 to $4,700, he said, citing the case of one neighbor who had received a bid of $4,588.65 for a hook up.

But Amberg's plea fell on unsympathetic ears — both from council members and from about 20 of Amberg's neighbors who turned out to support the underground district.

Rosemary McClard, who in August of 1981 helped set stretches up their street from Arlington Boulevard to Douglas Drive, including Julian Court and portions of Julian Drive. By January of 1985 the district's above-ground wires will be replaced by underground cables.

The cause for this thwarted uprising was money: hookups from private homes to underground cables are too costly, said rebel leader George Amberg.

"If this were a matter of public health or public safety, I would see no valid argument against it," Amberg said, as he submitted a petition with 24 signatures supporting his fight. "In this event we are talking aesthetics."

the underground movement in motion, pointed out that only 11 out of 71 neighbors originally opposed the district

City approves wage hike for its department heads

By FRANCES THOMAS

ALBANY — The City Council has approved a 2.3 percent wage hike for city hall department heads.

Although resident Dario Meniketti chided the council, saying some department heads might deserve a salary cut rather than an increase, the council voted unanimously Monday to ask for a resolution setting forth the salary hike.

In March fire fighters and city hall employees received a 2.3 percent hike. The new salary hike gives the city clerk, the finance director, the public works director, the fire chief, the administrative officer, the superintendent of parks and recreation, the city attorney and the city treasurer the same increase.

"Departments heads have gone for 18 months without an increase," Administrative Officer William Haden said, recommending council accept the increase. "Department heads are underpaid when compared to comparable jobs in El Cerrito and Pinole."

Currently for example, Haden earns $42,000 a year, while El Cerrito's city manager earns between $44,900 and $54,500.

In Albany salaries for department heads range from $20,700 for the city treasurer — a part time job — to $45,800 for the police chief, who will not receive an increase until the police officers association settles a labor dispute with the city. The police officers did not accept the March wage increase.

Meniketti told the council, "If you are going to hold the line (on spending), then wage cuts or no increases deserve to be considered." He asked council to postpone a decision until the June city budget hearings, but the council refused.

Like the wage hikes given earlier this year, the city will pay three percent of the employee's retirement payment effective March 1, 1984 another three percent beginning Sept. 1. The increased contribution to retirement system averages out to 2.3 percent hike, Haden said.

The city attorney and the city treasurer, who are not in the state retirement system, will receive a three percent salary increase effective March 1 and another three percent beginning Sept. 1.

All increases will lapse at the end of the year.

In other action, the council voted

Schools

Dropout study sparks big dispute

By BARBARA ERICKSON

A Richmond Unified study that claims white suburban students drop out of school more often than inner-city pupils was withdrawn from last week's school board agenda in the face of a dispute over its findings.

"It's goofy," said school board member Frank Calton, whose own calculation of high school dropout rates runs two to three times higher than the school district reported.

Among the report's claims is that Pinole Valley High has the biggest high school dropout problem. The report, which took five months to prepare, says the suburban school's dropout rate is more than twice that of Kennedy High in the inner city.

After Calton challenged the report during a subcommittee meeting, school administrators agreed to postpone the survey and bring it back in two weeks with "more detail."

The survey, titled "A Report to the Board of Education on Student Attrition with a Special Focus on Student Dropouts," is also in conflict with state and national research on dropouts.

The report claims that Richmond Unified's dropout rate is 9.2 or 11.1 percent, according to the method of calculation. Those figure is below both state and federal averages.

"Push Out, Step Out," a highly regarded report from 1982, for instance, sets the state dropout rate for junior and senior high schools at 30 percent.

Nationally, a 1981 census breakdown showed that 16 percent of the 18- and 19-year-olds surveyed admitted dropping out of school.

Public art overview: making Albany bloom

By FRANCES THOMAS

Carla Tenret

Bruce Horton

ALBANY — When the Arts Committee prepares its final recommendation for the sculpture project tomorrow, the city may have moved much closer to its first public art project — a project few would have dreamed of several years ago.

In fact, until two years ago, few people appeared to think the city needed an arts committee. But recently the arts in Albany have generated an increasing amount of interest.

"We serve as a model for the county, because we have gotten our act together faster," said Carla Tenret, the outgoing head of the local committee, who helped to organize the group with a small grant from the county.

The Arts Committee meets May 10 at 7:30 p.m. at the Albany Library. The committee is scheduled to discuss its recommendations for the proposed Key Route Sculpture Park. Oppositions from Key Route residents has led the committee to discuss alternate sites, which also may be discussed at the meeting.

Once the committee has made its recommendation to the City Council, the council will decide whether to accept the three proposed sculptures.

Last year the committee distributed an arts directory, listing about 65 artists and 30 businesses which support the arts, surprising some people with the extent of the arts community in the city.

This year the committee's sculpture proposal, as well as a second sculpture plan by a local artist, are generating discussion and dispute in a city where not too long ago, "everyone thought sculpture was a statue of Ulysses S. Grant," according to one artist.

Today, however, committee members and artists say the city is ready "to move into the eighties."

"Albany used to be a working class town, but more and more you get an educated community and things like arts get more play," said Tenret, who is also secretary of the county arts commission.

Besides the proposed sculpture park, the committee hopes to get other projects off the ground as well. One of its major goals is to find gallery space for artists to display their works. The city does not have a large gallery, but Tenret said the committee hopes to convince banks, real estate offices and other businesses to display local art.

Tenret said the generally bare walls at City Hall would be an ideal place to display art.

The committee also hopes to improve communications between the artists and community. Tenret said artists are solitary workers who often do not want to make the commitment to serve on a public committee. And when artists do get involved their work and projects may be criticized by the public.

"When you are in the forefront, people say, 'Why are you changing Albany? We like it the way it is,'" Tenret said.

But Ronnie Davis, head of the Albany library and an arts committee member, said the city might be more open to art and less reactionary than is generally thought.

"I have always been impressed with the community," she said. "It is literate, and there is a lot of community action."

Davis said one of the conclusions of an arts survey last year was that "people wanted to see more art in Albany." Like Tenret, Davis says one of the committee's goals should be to bring local artists out of "the woodwork" and connect them with other artists and community members. Davis said the committee could have a workshop, where artists could "network" and discuss ways to fund and to display art.

Bruce Horton, a local sculptor who is president of the Berkeley Arts Center Association, currently is working on a major regional sculpture project, which would start in Albany's BART Lineal Park.

Horton, who has received a $1,000 donation from resident Dario Meniketti — who also donated the money for the committee's sculpture project — said he chose Albany because the city's small-town qualities make it an ideal location for art.

"Albany doesn't have a ghetto," Horton said. "There is no big crime problem, and there is a unique setup where people are actually neighbors."

Although neighbors can band together to oppose a project, as many Key Route Boulevard residents have done, Horton said residents can also work together to push a project through.

"You can get people involved, from the elderly people who made Albany what it was to the university people who expect culture," Horton said.

"In Berkeley it's standard for people to oppose things and it is easier to tear things down. But Albany has people who help artists, people like Dario."

Although the committee and Horton are currently relying on the patronage of private donors, Davis said she hopes the committee will consider sponsoring local artists, perhaps awarding $500 grants to help develop art in the community.

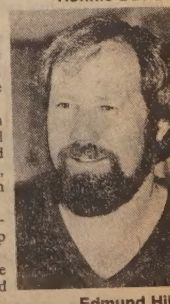

For Edmund Hill, the arts teacher at Albany High School, the grants could be a small step towards the ideal relationship he believes artists and communities should have. Hill says every city should support at least one artist, supplying him or her with a studio and lodging. In return the artist would donate work to the city.

Although Albany may not be ready for its own artist-in-residence, Hill said the sculpture project is a step towards building an endowment of art.

"Albany is unique in that it is small, and the sculpture would be accessible," Hill said. "Albany would be placed on the map for once."

2 lawsuits filed in paper case

The legal war over the Contra Costa Independent escalated Monday as Ingersoll Publications Co. and members of the Brown family traded fraud lawsuits in federal and state courts.

The paper's current manager, Warren "Chip" Brown IV, and his brother, Bill, filed their suit in Contra Costa Superior Court against Ingersoll alleging it backed out of an agreement to buy the Independent and its sister paper, the Times Journal.

The suit seeks $35 million in punitive damages.

The Browns also allege Ingersoll mismanagement during the last three years has left the Independent "virtually insolvent."

Ingersoll, the Browns say, ran the Independent "as proven amateurs, untrained, unskilled and incompetent in the field of newspaper management."

But Connecticut-based Ingersoll, in a suit filed in U.S. District Court in San Francisco, alleges the Brown family, through Brown Newspaper Publishing Co., prepared "false and misleading financial statements" and inflated circulation figures during negotiations for sale of the newspapers in 1981.

Ingersoll, which had an option in 1981 to purchase shares of capital stock in Brown Newspaper, claims it never bought the newspapers but only agreed to manage them.

The Ingersoll suit says Brown Newspaper showed an average daily circulation of more than 48,000 for the Independent, a figure Ingersoll alleges was too high by at least 18,000.

The amount of circulation is "a material statement of the newspaper's financial strength and well being," according to the suit.

The suit alleges fraud, breach of contract and racketeering and seeks $10 million in damages.

The two suits, and an earlier legal action filed Feb. 29 in Superior Court by other shareholders in Brown Newspaper, pit the Browns — Warren Brown Jr., Audra Nell Brown, Marie and Mark Wilson, Bill Wilson Brown, Warren "Chip" Brown IV and Mary Brown — against Ingersoll and its corporate officers — Ralph Ingersoll, Ralph Ingersoll II, Lee W. Stauffer, Thomas P. Geyer, Murray Schwartz, James R. Plugh and the company set up by the Ingersoll group, OSWeGI Publications Inc.

Also named in the suits is Barclays American Business Credit Inc., the paper's primary lender and largest creditor.

E.C. man wounded

An El Cerrito man hovers near death almost two weeks after being hit with a shotgun butt, while the man arrested for the assault is in county jail accused of attempted murder.

Scott Daughtry, 33, of Lincoln Avenue, remains in critical condition on a life-support system at Herrick Memorial Hospital in Berkeley. Jonathan T. Harton, 32, of Bayo Vista Avenue in Richmond, is charged with the April 28 attack. He is scheduled to enter a plea tomorrow in municipal court.

Daughtry, who grew up in Berkeley and graduated from Berkeley High School, is the son of realtor Claude Daughtry.

According to the elder Daughtry, his son, an automobile mechanic, may have gone to Hartman's East Richmond residence to collect the final payment for a motorcycle repair.

The sheriff's report said once there the two men argued, then fought and Hartman hit Daughtry in the head with the butt of a rifle.

Hartman then drove Daughtry to Herrick Hospital and left the area.

On May 2 Hartman telephoned the Contra Costa Sheriff's Department, to discuss surrendering. Lt. James Robinson said. Sheriff's detectives determined that Hartman was staying in Mendocino County and notified Mendocino authorities, who picked him up.

The elder Daughtry said his son had undergone two operations and remained unconscious.

In 1981, after years of ownership by Brown Newspapers, the financially ailing Independent and its sister paper, the Berkeley Gazette, were "sold" to Ingersoll.

The purchase price, according to the latest Superior Court suit, was $12 million. Of this, $5.1 million was to retire a debt owed Barclays and about $600,000 was to be used to pay other debts. Brown Newspaper was to get the remainder, about $6.3 million, the suit says.

Until the Barclays debt was paid, the Browns remained responsible for it, the suit says.

The Browns contend Barclays failed to keep them informed of dealings with Ingersoll — breaching the guarantor relationship — and at a certain point moved from a lending position to joint venturership.

Barclays contends Brown Newspaper is still responsible for the debt, to a maximum of $3.8 million, the suit says.

After the sale, Ingersoll set up a corporation, OSWeGI Publications Inc., to run the Gazette and the Independent.

The Browns contend OSWeGI was undercapitalized (less than $1,000 in common shares) and only a shell for the real control group, Ingersoll Publications, and the listed partners.

In February of this year, Ingersoll pulled out of publishing the Independent, the Gazette (which was subsequently closed in March) and the Times Journal, and the Browns returned.

The suit says Ingersoll is hiding behind its shell corporation, OSWeGI, to avoid liability.

The Browns, contesting this, have asked the court to decide the liability of all concerned.

Further, the Browns say that during the 1981 negotiations for the sale of the company Ingersoll representatives assured them Ingersoll would pay off the papers' debt and operate them profitably.

The true intentions of Ingersoll was to pay all bills through money earned by the newspapers, the suit contends.

The Browns contend that this constitutes fraud and have asked for $35 million punitive damages.

The Browns' Superior court suit contends Ingersoll Publications is worth $350 million.

At some point, the three lawsuits will probably be combined. Attorneys for both sides were unavailable for comment.

Love and war

I had a falling out with a friend the other day, and it left me with a bushel of feelings tumbling all over each other.

At first I was enraged: how could that SOB treat me like that? In this regard, I appear not to have changed at all since I was five years old, and shrieked at my then best friend that she was the meanest, stupidest person who ever lived.

Well, maybe I have changed: this time I didn't yell and scream.

But that didn't mean I wasn't angry. I had to squelch a desire to grab this irritating human being by the neck and SHAKE. I didn't, in part because it isn't the civilized thing to do, and in part because I had the sneaking suspicion that adding a bit of violence to an already inflamed situation would not help at all.

So we parted in anger, and for the next 10 minutes, I entertained myself with a list of how wronged I felt, all the nice things I had done, all the times I had put myself out, etc., etc. I followed this with a list of all the things I wish I had said, clever, biting remarks that would have demonstrated just how mean and nasty I can be.

Maybe there is something to this maturity business. Ten years ago, I would have said those things on the spot. I have never been at a loss for words, and when I am upset, I am not at a loss for angry words. But it seems that I have — oh, god, can it be true? — mellowed, and I no longer find the snappy sarcastic cracks tripping so easily off my tongue.

It's just as well, I suppose. My past is littered with bleeding corpses from verbal daggers that I've tossed, and I prefer myself in this current, softer version. Except —

Richmond Unified's report also claims a far different racial breakdown of dropouts than other studies have found. Research from all areas of the country says Hispanics have the highest dropout rate, but Richmond Unified's report shows whites as the highest at 45 percent of the total number of dropouts, listing blacks next at 42 percent and Hispanics far behind at 9 percent.

School board member George Cantu, who hasn't yet seen the report, was concerned that the study doesn't address Hispanic dropouts at junior high schools, something he suspects would raise totals for that group.

Bob George, head of research for the district, said Tuesday that the reports that conflict with Richmond Unified's are wrong.

"The detail in this report is far greater than the detail in attrition or dropout reports," George said.

The district report does acknowledge a 50 percent attrition rate for Richmond Unified, which means that enrollment in a 12th grade class is half that of the same class three years earlier.

The attrition rate is higher than in surrounding districts, but George says his report shows that dropouts are not responsible for the bulk of the attrition rate.

Therefore, he said, the high attrition rate doesn't reflect badly on the district.

"Why should there be concern?" he asked. "And if it was a concern, what could you do about it?"

If students aren't dropping out, what's happening to the 50 percent who disappear?

George said he has the answers, although they aren't in the report. Two school board members, Frank Calton and Eddis Harrison, asked him to provide the figures, calling for a breakdown of the students who left for reasons other than dropping out — transferring to other schools, or to juvenile hall, or graduating early.

Superintendent Richard Lovette said he asked for more details in the report because "it turns out everything wasn't satisfactory."

Lovette said the findings surprised him, but he was not ready to comment on the reasons for the differences from other research.

Board member Calton also computed the dropout rate differently, using the report's own figures, and came up with percentages closer to the usual research findings.

The district report bases the rate on two different sets of figures. The first uses only the students from the original ninth grade classes; the second includes students who entered the schools later.

Following is a school-by-school breakdown of attrition and dropout percentages.

The first figure represents the percentage of students who disappeared from the Class of 1983, based on district figures. The second percentages represent the two dropout rates calculated by the Richmond Unified study. The third figure is school board member Calton's calculation of the dropout rate.

The difference between the attrition rate and Richmond Unified's figures for the dropout rate is what the study doesn't account for.

Here's the breakdown:

- De Anza: 44 percent of the students vanished; the school district report says 7.9 percent of the student population drops out, or 10.6 percent if incoming transfers are included; Calton calculates a 32 percent dropout rate.
- El Cerrito: 27 percent of the students vanished; Richmond Unified says 8.8 or 13.1 percent of the school's students drop out; Calton says all 27 percent are dropouts.
- Ellis: 63 percent of the students vanished; Richmond Unified says

"We had some civic pride and we wanted that civic corridor to be a pleasure for the people of El Cerrito," she said.

Council member Jean Siri agreed. "The moment of truth has come," she said. "We are past the point of no return. And that's it."

Ed Hatzell: 30 years of diamond history

By JIM GRODNIK

EL CERRITO — Except for the years 1960 and 1961, every base hit, steal and put out in the last 30 years of local semi-professional baseball is recorded between the well-worn covers of Ed Hatzell's scorebooks.

Hatzell, 66, sponsored his first team in 1952. That began a string of El Cerrito Hatzell Radio Cardinals teams that lasted until this year. During that time, thousands of local players suited up for Hatzell-coached teams.

This year, he finally hung up his spikes. The expense of paying for bats, balls, umpires, travel and uniforms has proved too much. The money for backing the teams came from Hatzell's radio shop, and that closed in 1976.

"I was getting tired, anyway," said Hatzell, as he sat amidst a roomful of trophies, radio equipment and memories in the El Cerrito home his father built in 1946.

He's got the scorecard from the first game played (it was July 27, 1952 and the Cardinals lost 11-6) and from the last one (March 4, 1984, and the Cardinals dropped that one too, 3-2). The scorebooks from 1960 and 1961 were soaked and ruined, otherwise it's a complete set.

The books contain names like St. Louis Cardinal and Chicago Cub pitcher Ernie Broglio, and St. Louis Cardinal Keith Hernandez. There are local athletes like Phil Wanlin, who coached football and baseball at Albany High School, and now teaches history and social science. Current Gauchos coach Larry Quirico played for Hatzell from 1965-1968.

"Anybody that was a decent ballplayer in this area played for Eddie at one time or another," said Quirico, whose Gauchos just clinched the RBAL title. Hatzell's teams were loaded with talent, and he didn't do much lineup juggling. "He just let the guys go out and play," Quirico said.

Wanlin also played for the EC Cardinals in the 60s. He remembered a tournament in Grand Junction, Colorado, when the ever-generous Hatzell bought two cars for the team to drive home in.

"One fellow hadn't used a gear shift before, and the car blew the transmission," Wanlin said. Hatzell took it in stride. "Nothing bothered him except losing," Wanlin recalled. Solid squads kept him from being bothered too often. The Hatzell team of 1960 was the National Baseball Congress California champion.

Now that he has the time to pore over his records, Hatzell has totaled up the results of the games through the years. His teams won 737 and lost 432. That's a lot of baseball.

And a lot of memories.

One is the only no-hitter he ever saw, thrown by Al "Sparky" Harris in the Winter League in the mid-60s.

There was the 1969 team. "That was the best all-around team I ever had," Hatzell said. "There were so many good players I couldn't keep them all satisfied." He said first baseman Joe Porter and pitcher Phil Knuckles were standouts.

Hatzell remembers the hardest-hit ball he ever saw. It was stroked 30 years ago by a young Oakland ballplayer during a game in Palo Alto. "It was a line-drive that cleared that bag at second by about 3 feet. It just kept rising and went out over the centerfield fence." The batter was current Giants' manager Frank Robinson.

Hatzell drew his ball players from all over the Bay Area. "He was a recruiter and he got the best talent," Wanlin said. "I admire him for what he's done for baseball. He was always good with kids, and he put his whole heart in it."

Broglio was an El Cerrito High graduate, but Hatzell rounded up most of his talent from other communities. "I never did get that many players from El Cerrito," he said.

From the 50s there were Bob Meisner, Leroy Strain, Russ Beach, Lloyd Thornburgh, Buster and Jack Kinnard, Al Reynolds, Ed Menosse, Bill Hatzell (Ed's brother) and pitcher Mike Tatro.

Others included Miles Messenger and Larry Tognolini. Coaches Bill Erkkila, Emery Phillips and Mike Laferty played for Hatzell, as did Bob Pringle and Ed Greene, Contra Costa College's athletic director.

His 60s powerhouse clubs included brother Gary Hatzell, John Flavin, Lloyd Christopher, Leroy Dickens and Norm Olson.

In later years, Don Cross, Steve Lackie, Ralph Gage, George Bradbury, Steve Morales, Neill Cummings, Pete Scott, Jerry Van Hook, Larry Esquivel, Johnny Perez, John Souza, Joe Souza, Bill Wallace, Jimmy Fisher, Dan Anfonson, Ron Mears and Calvin Kelley took the field.

San Francisco firefighter Nick Canuli played for Hatzell, as did attorney Paul Louseth.

All that record keeping comes in handy. Last week, Hatzell was watching a segment on baseball in Italy on CBS-TV's "60 Minutes," and he saw a familiar face. A quick check of the record book showed that shortstop Dave Gallino from Pinole, now a star in Italy, played for Hatzell in 1976. "I thought I recognized that kid," Hatzell said.

Wrap-up

EL CERRITO

BASEBALL — The El Cerrito baseball team locked up its fourth title in as many years with two more victories last week. In beating De Anza and Berkeley High, the Gauchos raised their league record to 13-0, just two games shy of a perfect season.

In last Tuesday's victory over the Dons, Alvin Henderson won his fourth game of the year behind a blazing sidearm fastball. He scattered six hits while striking out two and walking three.

The game also featured the 115th RBI of senior Brian Nichols, something he has been working on for four years.

From there it was on to Berkeley on Friday where the Gauchos won a hitter's duel, 16-10. However the game was called in the fifth inning because the umpires could not control the tempers of both teams.

Midway through the fifth inning, Berkeley's Luther Couch apparently got a little tired of the ribbing he was receiving from some of the El Cerrito players. Unfortunately he picked the wrong person to try and take it out on as he rushed Gauchos hurler Pops Mitchell.

The result of this was a bench clearing brawl that forced the umpires to call the game after five innings, which led to the abbreviated Gauchos victory.

TRACK — It wasn't just a week for the baseball team at El Cerrito as the track team had quite an accomplishment of its own. In fact, the runners did something that had not been done since 1974 — beat powerhouse Berkeley in a league meet.

The Gauchos runners recorded a 106-99 upset over the Jackets at De Anza with sprinter Denise Ervin providing a good amount of personal heroics.

The female sprinter placed first in the 100 and 200 yard dash, clocking in with times of 12.1 and 25.1.

It must have been satisfying for Gauchos coach Sammy Burns, given that Berkeley has always had one of the nation's best teams in sprinting.

SWIMMING — In the RBAL league meet on Saturday, coach Terry Crowder didn't have much to cheer about except the performance of Stephanie Bjeldanes, who placed 2nd in the 200 intermediate and 3rd in the 100 fly.

However, the Gauchos as a team didn't finish behind both Pinole and Berkeley. "What we expect," said Crowder. "We don't have any swimmers."

ALBANY

BASEBALL — Across the city line, the Cougars were also clinching a playoff berth in the ACAL. Unfortunately, it wasn't for a first place finish.

Albany closed out its regular season with a 7-0 Alameda and a 7-4 victory over league rival San Leandro. The two games solidified the Cougars' league record at 7-8, good enough for a fourth place finish.

Tuesday's 20-1 drubbing at the hands of Alameda, who finished third in league, featured three home runs and 5 doubles.

If the ACAL follows its usual pattern, Albany have to take on first place Encinal in their first game, because of Encinal's first place finish. The second and third place teams — San Leandro and Alameda — also meet in the first round. Because Encinal is a better 1st team, it has to lose twice to be eliminated. Albany teams must win all games.

SOFTBALL — The girls' softball team had a week that embarrassed coach Liz Drennan.

The Cougars dropped two more games and must muster five hits for the entire week. "We obviously aren't hitting the ball and we are making too many errors," Drennan. "We are inexperienced and have no idea. Sounds like the same thing she said last week."

Last Tuesday, Albany dropped an 18-2 decision Alameda, which was halted after five innings of play to rain. On Friday, Larie Chelemados' double was the only thing that kept the Cougars from being no-hit. Cougars did score three runs but that wasn't enough to offset the onslaught by San Leandro.

The Pirates finished off the Cougars by a score of 3-0.

Lisa Borreani continued to hit well for the Cougars popping a pair of doubles in the Alameda game.

Trophy for local judo champ

By JIM GRODNIK

ALBANY — Albany's Dan Augustine, a 21-year-old San Francisco State student, won a divisional title at the National Senior Judo Championships held in Orlando, Florida, April 28 and 29.

Augustine, representing the Albany Judo Club, took first place in the 156-pound class. In two years he will begin training for the 1988 Olympics.

"He was convincing, just dominating," said his father, Mel Augustine, coach of the Albany club. Dan successfully competed against 67 wrestlers from around the nation.

On the way to the crown, he notched wins over John Hobales and Dan Toshima, both former national champions. Toshima formerly competed in the 172-pound class; he dropped to the lower weight for the competition.

Another Albany competitor, Dan Pagter, 26, competing in the open, or heavyweight, competition, finished third. Pagter, who weighs 250, lost a hard-fought opening match to Jim Mika, 260, who "demolished him" last year, according to coach Augustine. Pagter went on to win his remaining three matches.

Fred Kerns, 40, of Walnut Creek, took a bronze medal in the competition for athletes 35 and older.

Richmond's Davis Grosse, the collegiate 132-pound champion from Cumberland, failed to place, as did his sister, Lori Koldia. She was weakened by weight loss in coming down to the 145-pound division in her comeback after having a baby. Richard Hodges, 40, lost to former national champion Fred Hand.

Dan Augustine, who took up judo under his father's tutelage at age 8, is a senior at San Francisco State University. He is on the Dean's List, and plans to teach for two years before beginning his training for the 1988 Olympics.

A former Berkeley High School student body president, Augustine was National High School judo champion. Last year he finished second to Olympian Mike Swain in the National Collegiate Championships. In addition to attending college, Augustine currently is teaching 20 hours a week at John Muir School in San Francisco.

Police beat

ALBANY

Albany police report the following incidents, among others, for the week ending May 7:

- A man, who crept into a Solano Avenue apartment about 4:30 a.m. May 7 through an unlocked window, was confronted by the two female residents, one of whom apparently grabbed him by the neck and ordered him out. The man, who grabbed one 21-year-old woman by the crotch before leaving the apartment in the 1200 block of Solano Avenue, escaped with a wallet and credit cards.

- A Los Banos man reported he lost his wallet, containing $100, May 5 at Golden Gate Fields.

- An am-fm cassette stereo was reported stolen May 6 from an automobile parked in a Golden Gate Fields parking lot.

- A young boy on a tricycle was hit by an automobile May 6 in the 900 block of Cornell Avenue. The boy, who darted into the street, apparently only hurt an elbow and was taken home by police.

- The ex-husband of an Albany resident arrived at her home on Cornell Avenue May 6 and demanded to see his children. When the woman refused, the man threw an empty wine bottle through the front door, causing $50 in damage.

- A pair of binoculars, worth $120, was reported stolen May 6 from an unlocked automobile parked in the 1000 block of Pomona Avenue.

- Oscar Rolando-Garcia, 25, of Stannage Avenue, was arrested for disorderly conduct May 6 after he got into a fight with his girlfriend. Later police said Rolando-Garcia was an illegal alien and he was turned over to immigration officials.

- Two young girls reported May 5 a man ran towards them near Monroe Street and San Pablo Avenue, lifted his shorts and exposed himself.

- A silver 10-speed Schwinn bicycle, worth $50, was reported stolen May 5 from a house in the 1000 block of Cornell Avenue.

- A sterling silver mirror, worth $160, was reported stolen May 5 from Second Hand Rose, 1111 Solano Ave.

- A Kensington woman, who was watching the sun set at Cougar Field with a friend May 4, reported losing $800. The woman discovered the loss later in the evening when she started to pay a restaurant bill.

- Four hubcaps, worth $100, were reported stolen May 4 from a vehicle parked in the 1200 block of Brighton Avenue.

- A 1967 white Mustang, left unlocked and with the keys on the seat, was reported stolen May 5, when it owner left it for about 20 minutes parked in the 800 block of Talbot Avenue.

- An El Cerrito man reported May 4 a ziplock bag, containing $4,651.78 in cash and checks, was found from his unlocked automobile parked in the 900 block of Solano Avenue.

- An El Cerrito man was arrested after he threatened children during recess at an Albany school. William J. Kearney, III, a 29-year-old resident of Range Road, was arrested May 4 after police said several boys they were not worth living and should be up into little pieces. Police said Kearney then told the girls they were whores and tramps.

- Kearney apparently then poured a beer over his head and left the playground. He was arrested near Solano and Evelyn avenues.

- Safeway, 1500 Solano Ave., reported May 7 it received a bomb threat, from a man who called saying "I don't like your communist business. I have a bomb in your store. I'm serious." Police found no evidence of a bomb.

- Shortly later the Liquor Barn, 836 San Pablo Avenue, which is owned by the Safeway chain, reported it received a bomb threat. A man called saying, "I just f---g bomb on your shelf, because you are a member of goddamn communist safeway." Police found no evidence of a bomb.

- A 35-year-old Albany woman locked her keys in her baby into a new automobile with electronic door May 3. The police were unable to open the automobile but the woman's husband was contacted and brought other set of keys.

- A radio, tools, luggage, jewelry and cassette worth $2,920, were reported stolen May 3 from an automobile parked at the Villa Motel, 1155 San Pablo Avenue.

- A 12-year-old girl reported May 2 a man in a wheelchair offered her candy if she would climb into his van parked on Key Route Boulevard near the Albany High School. Police said they were unable to locate the man.

- Leigh A. Lindgren, a 32-year-old resident of Dorado in El Cerrito was arrested May 3 and charged with driving while intoxicated, after the automobile she was driving struck a stop sign at Santa Fe and Pomona avenues.

- A truck's tires were punctured and sugar poured into its gas tank May 2 while it was parked in the 1000 block of Kains Avenue.

- A red 10-speed Windsor International bicycle worth $250, was reported stolen April 29 from a house in the 1000 block of Kains Avenue.

- A cash register was reported stolen April 29 from Guiley's Beauty Supply, 1161 Solano Ave. There were 24 adult arrests this week.

Dancing in the dark

Watch your mouth: According to El Cerrito police, Paul Westergard of Albany was buying beer at Pic-N-Pac on San Pablo Avenue when a 23-year-old Albany man, impressed by Westergard's 6-foot-6, 265 pound frame, said, "You should be a wrestler." Westergard, who was not amused, said, "I ought to be a boxer," and demonstrated with a right hook. He was charged with assault and battery.

An imposing bronze plaque, bolted to the building between 1585 and 1587 Solano Ave. in Thousand Oaks, looks like one of those state historical markers commemorating the first store built in Alameda County, or something like that...a close look reveals, "On this site in 1897, nothing happened."

An uncharitable thief stole $68 from Sharon Dawes, 24, of Richmond as she was modeling in a charity fashion show at the El Cerrito Eagles Hall. The purse pilferer removed $68 from Dawes' handbag and left $20 behind. Dawes, who operates a day-care center, said, "I was p---d." Her plans for future charity modeling are uncertain.

Tired of the same old political advertising? Take a look at Contra Costa Superior Court judge candidate Hal Mutnick's circulars. Borrowing a line from the old Smuckers' jam ads, he says, "With a name like Mutnick he has to be a good judge."...Critics of Bird or Burger might not agree that an odd name means a good judge...On the reverse side of the flyer, for a reason only the candidate can fathom, is a picture of Mutnick at age six months.

Getting personal: For an out-of-the-ordinary recorded message, try 763-4717, parental discretion is advised...Or you might try answering this ad in the Bay Guardian: "Aggressive, loud, foul-mouthed controlling, slightly over-extended ex-army nurse desires wimpy male for short-term relationship until estranged husband returns to love nest. No weirdos please."

Quotes that never got quoted: From a losing attorney, "Justice has been done. We will not appeal." From any coach in any sport, "This game doesn't mean much to us. The one we're really looking forward is the game after this...Then there's basketball player Akeem Olatunji, who decided to pass up his senior year at Auburn and turn pro, "I've decided to enter this year's draft and forgo my final year in school. I want to end speculation on my future so I can concentrate on my studies." It's not a crime to want to become a millionaire, Akeem, but kindly spare us the baloney about studies.

Some red faces resulted from the gossip column in Albany Middle School's paper, the Power's Press. The last edition included such tidbits as "D.A. has been going with C.W. for two years and they have not kissed." To avoid embarrassment from their intrepid reporting, student columnists Micki Martinez and Jenny Carroll now pass their gossip sheets through the classroom for approval before the paper goes to press.

Spare me these phrases: "per person, double occupancy," "no-host cocktails," "edited for television," "he's away from his desk right now," "not too shabby" and "have a good one" (good what?)...One of my all-time favorites seems, mercifully, to have disappeared...slightly higher west of the Rockies."

The principal is a punster: Every school day, there's a silver Mazda sports car, bearing the license plate AGRX-VII, parked in the Cornell School lot. It belongs to principal Linda Henderson, and no, she didn't run out of letters in an effort to spell aggravate with Roman numerals...AG is the chemical symbol for silver; RX-7 is the model of the car, hence "silver RX-7."

The eyes have it

The nice photo which you published along with the footnote detailing the inauguration of our new microsurgical unit for eye surgery at Eastbay Hospital was brought to my attention. I would like to compliment you on the fine job that you did in bringing this information to the public's attention.

Eastbay Hospital has undergone substantial renewal and reorganization since it was opened a year ago on the site of the old Richmond Hospital. It provides a vital service to the surrounding community and its survival provides an enhancement in the continuing medical care of the area.

I would like to thank you for your help to the hospital and I know that this will be appreciated by members of the community who are served by it. If you have any questions in the future concerning eye surgery or ophthalmology, please, do not hesitate to contact me and I will be happy to assist you. Thanks again for a job well done.

Sincerely yours,

Our art's in the right place

At a recent Arts Commission meeting, Carla Tenret, an ex-officio member of the Commission and resident of Albany, brought us a copy of the April Arts Page. She said that this would become a monthly feature of the Times Journal.

The Commission feels that this is a wonderful program that the Times Journal has undertaken. The rich cultural community of the northwestern part of the County will give you ample material for your monthly feature.

We are especially pleased that the Albany Arts Committee, which was started with assistance from our Commission, was instrumental in helping the Times Journal to develop this feature. We will be using your Arts Page as an example of what can happen when local arts councils work together with local newspapers to help the community to keep abreast of local arts activities.

Thank you for your very active support of the arts.

Sincerely,
Sharon Kidder, Chairperson
Alameda County Arts Commission.

Profile of an organizer extraordinnaire

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — On her resume, Anne Milkie calls herself an "independent arts management consultant and producer."

In person, she puts it more concisely: "I'm an organizer. Organizing is what I've always done."

Milkie was a prime organizer behind Carnaval, an annual cultural celebration in San Francisco's Mission district, during 1979-83. She coordinated Berkeley's Celebration of Transportation, a festival of alternative modes of transport, in 1982.

Now she is working on a fair for children and teenagers on the theme of the peaceful uses of technology. This project is part of a "Spirit of America" festival sponsored by a coalition of peace and environmental groups and timed to coincide with the Democratic National Convention in July.

"I do all the arrangements," she said — "the overall design of events, getting permits, public relations, artwork, coordinating stuff, recruiting volunteers, working with the police and fire departments, working with businesses..."

Milkie, 40, left a secure job in San Francisco public library system to become a full-time freelancing arts manager, a clear indication she must like it. She admits to sometimes having second thoughts: "It gets tiring having to hustle all the time." There is another drawback: "It seems like each major production takes years off your life!"

Just what adds those gray hairs, Milkie said, is that "You have to acknowledge all the artistic temperaments and egos that are involved. You have to hold your tongue, just look the other way, to get people to work together."

But she finds the challenge a meaningful one. "The only way we can live together as people is to try to get along, appreciate our differences and find our common ground."

A midwesterner, Milkie began her organizing career when she came to northern California in 1968 as a Vista volunteer. She was right out of Illinois' Aurora College, where she studied English. After working in Oakland's model cities program and other poverty programs, she returned to school, getting a master's degree in library science from UC-Berkeley.

She worked for the San Francisco public library system for five years. Her experience doing adult programming for the Mission district branches led her into the ethnic festival Carnaval.

Ann Milkie's telephone rarely stops ringing when she is organizing an event

"I believe the public library in any neighborhood should reflect the interests of the people in the community," she said. "The Mission is multi-racial and multi-cultural, predominantly Latin. Carnaval is a major expression of their pride in their culture."

The festival, she noted, grew from a neighborhood event involving about 15,000 people to a big affair drawing up to 80,000 to the San Francisco Civic Center.

Milkie said her primary interest is in organizing events that make social or political statements, but she is no flaming revolutionary.

"In the 60s, we tried to work outside the system," she said of her generation. "Now we work through the system. We've all become part of the system, and we want to work for its health."

Milkie's latest project was to have been the East Bay Media Center's second annual video and computer exchange, scheduled for mid-April. The first one was the center's main fundraiser last year.

However, Milkie discovered she could not interest enough participants, and the event had to be canceled. Her explanation is that such exchanges have become too commonplace. "People are burned out on video and computer fairs," she said.

In addition to festivals, Milkie has worked on art exhibits and cable tv programs. She also is a photographer. She does some strictly commercial projects — she served as photographer for the Chocolate Extraordinaire festival in San Francisco in 1982, and she and her husband now have a license to print and sell Olympic t-shirts in advance of the Los Angeles games.

Milkie usually has several projects going at once. During the past six months, she also has been managing a project of her own: remodeling and expanding the downstairs of her Albany home. "I go crazy when I have nothing to do," she said.

We've Got It and We've Got It Good

The Mayfest Caper heads toward climax on Saturday

EL CERRITO — Billy Hogan, a suspect in the continuing Mayfest Caper, was found poisoned after a wild party at the White Knight speakeasy.

The death of Billy Hogan is part of an ongoing imaginary murder mystery played out in real locations by a group of amateur improvisational actors, which will end with the El Cerrito Plaza Mayfest on Saturday, May 12.

Private detective Joe Deco reports: I got the story from madam's ex-maid, Helga Olsen, the following day. Helga had gone to the speakeasy to ask for a job. All the suspects were there.

Helga said, "I told my friend Mrs. Hogan that Billy

Suddenly, the solution hit me in the face would come to a bad end. I don't speak evil of the livin' or dead, but I was outside El Cerrito Station speakeasy when the poor madam was killed, and I saw it was Billy drove the getaway car. I didn't tell because I don't want no cause no trouble.

"Then Billy come into the White Knight and Mrs. Hogan laid down the law. Then there was a raid, and the police smashed everything and somehow Billy ducked out in the confusion. What a mess! Someone ought to arrest the police... for destruction of property."

Helga dusted my tie. Suddenly the solution hit me in the face, and I knew I'd keep my vow to reveal the murderer at the Mayfest.

Fire levels EC home

EL CERRITO — A fire Friday night burned out of control at the 1845 Arlington Blvd. home of Eural McKelvy, sonnel manager of the Harlem Clowns basketball team.

McKelvy, his wife, Eleanor, and their four-year-old granddaughter, Sikiya Blue, escaped injury, according to Cerrito Battalion Chief Larry Armstrong.

Armstrong said the cause of the 7:30 p.m. fire has yet been determined, but that it appeared to be a dental electrical fire.

He estimated the damage to be $300,000 and the house a total loss.

Richmond and Kensington fire departments responded to the call and 17 firefighters took five hours to control and mop up the fire.

Help for disabilities: an overview

By JIM GRODNIK

Although Albany and El Cerrito are too small to offer facilities of their own, a variety of programs for people with handicaps are available nearby.

A pioneer in the field is Berkeley's Center for Independent Living, which offers services to disabled people and their families. No one lives at the center — the focus is teaching people how to live in the real world. The center also engages in lobbying to eliminating barriers to the handicapped.

Serving between 600 and 650 people a month, CIL provides help for people with disabilities in dealing with problems of day-to-day life. Alameda County residents comprise 81 percent of those served.

One of the services of CIL is attendant referral, in which counselors interview and screen people who wish to work as aides to the handicapped. There is also a wheelchair repair service and an inventory of spare parts.

Lela Hill, CIL development officer said, "People who are disabled depend on their wheelchairs like we depend on our bicycle or automobile."

In addition, the CIL has an employment development project that helps disabled workers to locate jobs. The program also works with employers in making workplaces accessible.

CIL, at 2539 Telegraph Ave., offers programs for the blind and the deaf, and financial counseling for people who collect social security and disability payments.

Counseling is offered to disabled youths and their parents. "A lot of disabled people tend to be overprotective and they don't know how to deal with it when their child wants permission to live alone," Hill said.

There are classes in homemaking, money management, socialization skills, and how to use transportation.

Disabled people comprise most of the staff of the center, which was founded in 1972 by a group of handicapped students at UC-Berkeley. Funds are raised through private foundations, from corporations such as IBM, Xerox, Prudential, Sears, Levi Strauss and Control Data Corp., and from the annual Oakland A's-KSFO telethon. Call 841-4776 or TTY 848-3101 for information.

At the Easter Seal Rehabilitation Center, 2757 Telegraph Ave., Oakland, a staff of 20 offers outpatient and home rehabilitation services. Patients of all ages receive care for arthritis, stroke, head and spinal cord injuries, orthopedic conditions, amputations, sensory disorders, speech and language disorders. The center is a non-profit organization.

Albina Moynahan, 80, of El Cerrito, received physical therapy and speech therapy there after suffering a stroke in May, 1983. She now works on speech exercises at home with her husband Sam. Every Wednesday she goes to the center for coffee and cookies in a group with other stroke victims.

The Easter Seal Center (835-2131) offers a sliding fee scale. Sam Moynahan said occupational therapy for his wife cost $20 per visit; his speech therapy was covered by Medicare and federal insurance.

The Center for Communication Disorders at Children's Hospital, 51st and Grove streets in Oakland (428-8787) is the only one of its kind in Northern California. The center specializes in diagnosis and therapy for children with speech, hearing and language difficulties.

Using new techniques, the center's doctors are able to help unborn infants for hearing impairment.

On Friday, May 18, at 7:30 p.m., Musign, a professional dance-theater company of hearing-impaired performers, will present New Ventures, a musical revue choreographed in sign language, dance and mime. The performance is a benefit for the communication disorders center. It will be held at Head-Royce School, 4315 Lincoln Ave., Oakland.

For reservations, call 524-6087 or 428-3344. Tickets are $20, $10 for students and will be held at the door.

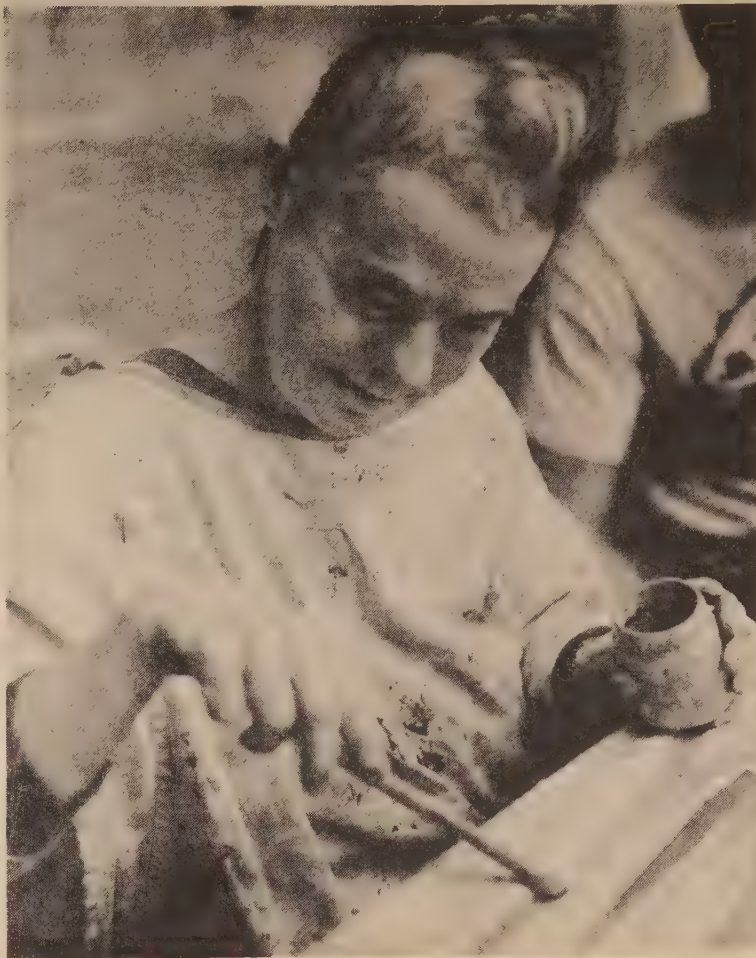

All people, even the most severely disabled, need an outlet for their creativity, and that's where Florence Ludins-Katz and Elias Katz come in.

Ludins-Katz, an artist and educator, and her husband, a clinical psychologist who was the head psychologist at Sonoma State Hospital in the '50s, opened Oakland's Creative Growth Gallery in 1973. Creative Growth was designed for mentally and physically handicapped people to paint, sculpt and draw.

Since leaving Creative Growth, the Katzs have opened art studios for the handicapped in Berkeley, San Francisco and San Francisco.

Their latest project, the Institute of Art & Disability, opened May 5, at 233 S. 41st Street in Richmond. In a workshop they will teach both the disabled, and those who wish to set up similar centers.

Where the wheelchairs are

By JIM GRODNIK

Each Friday at 11:30 a.m., Stephen and Ethel Dunn are gently lifted from their wheelchairs and deposited in the water of the Albany pool.

The poolside lift, one of the few in the Bay Area, enables the Duns, both of whom have cerebral palsy, to enjoy swimming. For the past two years, the far left lane of the pool has been reserved for them on Fridays.

"The staff of this facility is marvelous," Ethel Dunn said before her weekly swim.

People in wheelchairs are constantly confronted by barriers to ordinary life, and Albany and El Cerrito both have agencies that can make life easier for wheelchair users.

Older buildings cause problems. However, new buildings that are financed by state or federal funds must provide a place for wheelchairs to enter.

Neither Albany High School, which was built in the mid-30s, nor El Cerrito High School, built in 1941, were designed with wheelchairs in mind.

The three-story El Cerrito building is accessible from the rear by wheelchair, but there are no elevators in the building. Teacher Sandy Berman needs assistance to get his wheelchair above the first floor. None of the school's bathrooms can accommodate a wheelchair.

Currently, Richmond Unified School District students who are confined to wheelchairs go to Harry Ells in Richmond, but principal Anna Blackman is aware that someday there could be a problem.

"If someone (in a wheelchair) lived in the district and insisted on coming here, we'd have to make provision for them," she said.

Albany High was opened to wheelchair access when Jonah Markowitz, a student with cerebral palsy, entered five years ago. The school's back door was modified with a ramp for Markowitz and the first floor bathroom made accessible.

Markowitz, who took a full academic load at Albany High and graduated last year, was carried to the second floor by aides who were hired with special education funds. The school has no elevator and no ramps leading to the second floor.

If Albany High receives state reconstruction money this summer, some form of access will probably be built. Only Vista Elementary School in the Albany district is inaccessible for wheelchairs. However, the other two elementary schools, Cornell and Marin, can accommodate students in wheelchairs.

In both Albany and El Cerrito, 16 percent of the residents are over 65 — a high percentage — and both cities have senior centers offering services to the handicapped.

The whole fruit

By JANE R. KAPLAN
(with Cindy Pemberton)

Pediatric Consultant: Ann L. Parker, M.D.

Fruit juice is a popular drink for children. It is tasty, healthy and a good source of vitamins. Or is it? Not only does fruit juice coat teeth with sweet, acid, cavity-promoting material, but also it is not the best in terms of nutrition or weight management. Over the course of a day, a toddler may drink 10 oz. or more of juice.

An orange is low in calories (70 calories) and high in Vitamin C and fiber. A scant ounce of orange juice contains the same amount of calories as an orange. However, the juice contains less Vitamin A, much less fiber, and only about a sixth of the iron found in a fresh orange.

Apples are an excellent source of fiber. Studies show that the fiber in apples (pectin) helps control serum cholesterol levels. Apple juice contains only a trace of fiber, and no Vitamin C.

Getting children into the habit of eating the whole fruit will help children develop good later eating habits. It will eliminate a precedent for drinking sugary drinks like sodas and will set a precedent for eating whole foods containing fiber, vitamins, and minerals. Everyone needs a variety of foods in their diet. Babies and toddlers can drink so much juice that they spoil their appetite for other foods.

Gerber's and other baby foods manufacturers make juices especially appealing on the shelf. Some of the small cute bottles even come with their own nipples, making the transition from jar to mouth all too easy.

Of course, in some families, a glass of juice in the morning is a tradition. If it is in your family, think about limiting your child to this morning juice (diluted by at least half), and using water or low fat milk for other beverages. Water can actually provide valuable fluoride. You can also satisfy the need for "juice" by pouring a cup of water over a few tablespoons of juice.

A commonly asked question is, "Will my child get enough vitamin C without a big glass of OJ each day?" This is a good question since we each need vitamin C on a daily basis. If your child's only daily source of vitamin C is a glass of orange juice in the morning, then by all means, continue this practice.

However, a more nutritionally sound way to meet one's requirement is to eat: oranges, tangerines, grapefruits, cantaloupe, papaya, lemons, limes, bell pepper, cabbage, tomatoes, strawberries (careful: a possible allergen) and broccoli.

Note: Vitamin C is very fragile. Cooking destroys some of the vitamin C in foods, especially when prepared in large amounts of cooking water. Air also destroys vitamin C. So when preparing juices, keep them tightly covered and in the refrigerator. The vitamin C content will remain high only for 2-3 days. After that, it combines with oxygen and is not available to our bodies.

Of course, when a child is ill and fluids are so important, juice in a bottle can be a good way to get the child to drink. But, for a healthy normal weight child and especially an overweight child, juice is not necessary and may be good to limit or avoid.

Remember, having a variety of fresh whole fruits in your child's diet is very important. Different fruits contain different types and amounts of nutrients, all of which are necessary for a properly functioning body. One medium size fruit (apple, peach, pear) or one half of a larger piece of fruit (grapefruit, banana, or papaya) contains between 40 and 60 calories — a sweet nutritional deal if there ever was one.

Jane R. Kaplan, Ph.D., M.P.H. is a psychologist and coordinator of the Alta Bates Weight Management Program, a program which combines diet, exercise, and behavior change to treat overweight adults. In her private practice, she treats food and eating disorders. She is author of "A Woman's Conflict: The Special Relationship Between Women and Food" (Prentice Hall, 1980).

Cindy Pemberton, R.D., M.P.H. is the nutritionist with the Alta Bates Weight Management Program. She is also in private practice where she treats overweight and other nutritional concerns. She is author of the recently published "Getting In Shape" (Creative Arts, 1983).

House calls

By THOMAS KIM STERN, M.D.

Dear Dr. Stern,

I am a healthy 49-year-old woman. About a year ago my periods stopped and I went through menopause without difficulty. A friend says I should be taking female hormones. What do you think?

Answer: After menopause, the ovaries no longer produce much female hormones. Until the 1970's, female hormones were regularly given to post-menopausal women to replace this lack, the main aims being to control "hot flashes" and to maintain a sense of well-being. But when reports came out that estrogens can increase rates of uterine cancer, this practice declined and many physicians took all women patients off hormones altogether.

But current research has shown that if estrogens are given cyclically with progesterones (another female hormone), then the risks of uterine cancer drop to near normal or even below. Thus there is once again a movement toward hormone replacement for post-menopausal women. There are many reasons why.

Other than retarding certain aging processes and preserving a usually increased level of well-being, the main reason has to do with preventing a disease called osteoporosis. In this condition there is weakening and loss of bone, so that fractures of the hip, back and arm occur easily. Women may lose height and develop stooped postures because the vertebrae of the backbone crumple. Major hip operations, though skillfully done, are serious events to be avoided if possible.

It is now conclusively known that post-menopausal women who take estrogens and supplemental calcium lose substantially less bone than women who do not. Thus I advise most of my patients, unless there are medical reasons to the contrary, to take hormones. Some patients elect not to take them. Certainly they should only be taken under a physician's supervision.

My answer to you, then, is to ask your family physician about hormones and their risks and benefits for you.

Dear Dr. Stern,

I am a 38 year old man. I was well until last month, when I was told I have high blood pressure, 170/100 was the number. Then my doctor started me on a "water pill" to lower it. What else can I do?

Answer: First of all I am concerned about recent studies showing that young men treated with such drugs had an increased death rate, probably due to mineral imbalances caused by the diuretics. Nondrug measures that lower blood pressure by another mechanism might be preferable for you; but your doctor knows you better than I and must tailor your treatment to you specifically.

I usually favor a trial of non-drug therapy in early hypertension; and if this fails, then chemicals must be added. Specific measures include weight loss, reduction of dietary salt, and deep relaxation training.

Blood pressure often falls one point for each pound lost, but body weight is tough to change. Salt restriction is quite beneficial in some patients, but not all. Some researchers advocate a modest trial of calcium supplements.

The deep relaxation response can lower blood pressure 10 to 15 points if the exercises are done on a regular basis. Ask your physician for a referral to some one who can train you in this technique.

Dear Dr. Stern,

I read recently that some doctors are recommending that Pap smears (for cancer of the cervix) be done every three years instead of yearly. What is your opinion?

Answer: Cancer of the cervix used to kill a lot of women, but it doesn't anymore because of early detection and good treatment. If a tiny cancer goes undetected, in three years it could be too late. Thus I think Pap smears should be done yearly, or more often in some cases. Furthermore, since a breast exam should be part of the annual visit, breast cancers are more likely to be found by the physician at an earlier stage when the exams are done yearly. Some of the large professional groups say three years is often enough, but I don't want to run that experiment on my patients.

Dear Dr. Stern,

My new doctor refuses to give me penicillin or tetracycline for the flu. My old doctor would give me a shot, and in 2 or 3 days I was well. Who is right?

Answer: Influenza is caused by a virus. Penicillin and tetracycline have no effect on viruses. Therefore someone gets well just as fast without penicillin as with it. Once in a while these antibiotics cause bad reactions, so they should never be used where they can't possibly help. Thus, your new doctor is right.

Dr. Stern welcomes questions at his office, 2636 Telegraph, Berkeley 94704.

Former stroke victim Albina Moynahan with therapist Catherine Geraghty

DISABILITIES

"Creativity is common to all people," said Ludins-Katz. "We provide a caring environment and a sympathetic, trained staff."

They design inventions to help people overcome physical handicaps. Someone with no hands can paint by putting a brush in his or her mouth. Instead of a $400 cast of the teeth, used by facilities with more money, Ludins-Katz designed a rubber spatula, with a brush attached, that the artist could hold in his mouth.

Painters with cerebral palsy use muffin tins clamped down so they can't be pushed over. People without arms have the paint on a turntable they can push with their feet. Pizza cutters and rolling pins are aids to handicapped sculptors working with clay.

Those with emotional problems and retarded intellectual development need caring, not physical aids, and they receive it at the Katz center. "For the mentally handicapped, art is a release of the spirit. It builds ego strength," she said.

Having a physical and or mental disability doesn't mean a person lacks artistic talent.

Lionel, a young man with emotional problems who worked at the Berkeley center, was "one of the most gifted sculptors I've ever seen," Ludins-Katz said. Arlene Tuor from Creative Growth has produced a critically acclaimed one-woman show.

Other graduates of the Katzs' programs will be showing their work in October at San Francisco's Chowning Gallery, at the War Memorial Building, and at P.G. & E's Market Street offices.

But whether the artist is talented, creating art provides an outlet. Rayanna, with an IQ "around 11" spent many hours happily absorbed in her work. At the Berkeley Center, Cecelia was just as proud of her painting as Jackson Pollock or Picasso were of theirs.

Florence Ludins-Katz and Elias Katz have written a 235-page book, "Art and Disabilities," which provides information on how to organize and run a creative art center. It is available for $15, postage paid, from the center, 233 S. 41st St., Richmond, 94804. Call 620-0290 for information.

WHEELCHAIRS

At both centers, canes, walkers and wheelchairs can be borrowed at no charge. There is no time limit on borrowing from the Albany Senior Center, 846 Masonic Ave. (644-8500), but Dorothy Pitter, assistant director said, "If we don't hear from them in a year or so, we give them a call." The center is at ground level and is accessible.

The Open House Senior Center in El Cerrito, 6510 Stockton Ave., has a van equipped to pick up people in their wheelchairs and bring them to the center. In addition, the van is available on Mondays and Wednesdays for trips to Brookside Hospital, San Pablo; Kaiser Hospital, Richmond; and Alta Bates, Albany.

Director Ellen McDonald-Paasch said wheelchair-bound people should call 526-6744 between 8:30 and 9 a.m. on the day they want to go. For the Monday and Wednesday trips to the hospitals, people should call two days before.

McDonald said the Monday and Wednesday scheduling has been no problem. "Most doctors understand and work with us, and make their appointments accordingly."

Cost for use of the van is 25 cents each way for trips in El Cerrito, 50 cents each way for trips out of the city. Scripbooks are available at the center. For people who are unable to leave their homes, Meals on Wheels will deliver hot lunches for $3.50 a day.

In addition to wheelchairs and canes, the center provides magnifying glasses for reading, and for El Cerrito residents there is a tele-caption machine that deaf people may borrow for use on their television sets at home.

Schools find gifted answers

By BARBARA ERICKSON

Students talented in the arts will take part in a Richmond Unified "starter" project next year, a compromise version of a controversial plan to begin the district's gifted program.

The school board unanimously agreed Tuesday to begin immediately to identify qualified students.

The original plan by the administration would have included nine schools, three each at the elementary and senior high levels. About 640 students would have been taken part, compared with an estimated 60 in the adopted program.

Superintendent Richard Lovette said the compromise, recommended by the administration, was "somewhat palatable to everyone." It came "considerable discussion" with the gifted program Advisory Committee, he said.

Advisory committee members vigorously opposed the plan when it first was proposed, saying it would be a roving instructor in the gifted program, said the district's gifted program, said the plan would spread the resources thin.

But poetry teacher Marybeth Falkenstein, who was a roving instructor in the gifted program, said the plan would be "cutting your own throats" because of the spread the resources thin.

On the other side, parent activist Barbara Anderson asked why the plan had been cut so dramatically. "You're giving into these folks?" she asked. "If you're going to have two elementary and one junior high."

Her husband Billy urged the board to support the administration's latest recommendation and begin a permanent program. Where would society be, he asked, Shirley Temple or Michael Jackson had had no training in their early years?

In response to questions about the sites, elementary education head Debbie La Salle said the plan was because it has an enthusiastic and talented staff, and expansion and access to the Richmond Art Center, BART, the East Bay Center for the Performing Arts and the Nevim Community Center.

The board vote also calls for in-service training for principals to encourage more support for the program, a gifted department within each secondary school and an assessment of needs for talented students completed before the end of the 1984-85 year.

At the same time, the decision delays final staffing for the program, in particular administrative recommendations to cut the coordinator position to 50 percent (assigning the job to a 60 percent time principal at a small school) and to eliminate the high school coordinator for the gifted.

Lovette said that the school being considered for job-sharing role is Shannon, which now splits its role with Seaview. When Seaview becomes a junior high school next year, it will have a full time principal.

District Advisory Committee members have tentatively opposed assigning the job to a part time principal. They also want to retain the high school coordinator.

The board will vote on the staffing changes when administration returns with a detailed budget. The district is estimating that the program will require $160,000 from the state next year, down from $175,000 this year.

Every day seems to be busy for mothers

Sharing a quiet moment with her children is Linda Beckman (right), with infant daughter Sofia and 4-year-old Alexander. Below, Times Journal editor Roberta Alexander brings her blue pencil home: daughter Alexis Roth studies French, while younger sister Miranda gets a helping hand on algebra.

Being a mother is usually a serious business, but there has to be time for silly stuff too. At left, Deborah Mahle plays with her 3-year-old son, Ryan. And being a mother doesn't stop when you become a grandmother, either. Heewon Lee (below) brings sushi to her granddaughter, and offers some to playmate Maria Huang.

By Oswald Jacoby and James Jacoby

Frank Stewart, whom we know only from his delightful articles in the ACBL "Contract Bridge Bulletin," has written a book entitled "Better Bridge for the Advancing Player." He doesn't give many hands, but here is one from a Vanderbilt semifinal.

At both tables the bidding was identical. Frank suggests that the jump to four hearts was not the best bid, but both great experts made it and left it to their partners to bring it in.

The seven of diamonds was led at both tables. At table one, South played out high cards. He went up with the diamond ace and played A-K of hearts and then A-K-J of spades. East ducked with the queen and South discarded his losing diamond. South was home. He had six trumps, two spades and two minor suit aces.

At the other table, South finessed the diamond queen. When a club came back, declarer won it, cashed his A-K of trumps, and then played A-K-J of spades. When East covered with the queen, South could not avoid losing four tricks.

Frank Stewart, in accordance with a policy of this column never to offend any player by using his name in connection with a bad play, did not give the name of the successful declarer since the name of the other would become known. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

Principal Hill's death stuns Stege school

Students and staff at Stege Elementary School mourned the sudden death of principal Alonzo Hill, 56, who succumbed to complications from a stroke early May 3.

"Everyone was just really stunned," said Stege secretary Diane Cotright. "Hill, she said, had shown no signs of illness and had not appeared to be under unusual stress before he was stricken."

For the past four years Hill was principal of Stege, one of the largest elementary schools in Richmond Unified, with 400 students. He entered the district as a teacher in Nystrom in 1960 and taught at Fairmeade before moving to Stege in 1969.

In 1975 Hill became principal of Riverside and split his time between Riverside and Stege until he moved to Stege.

Cotright said Hill was an avid skier, and a carpenter. He built a showcase for his furniture for his home in El Cerrito, she said. Hill is survived by his wife Ruth, a daughter and a son Al.
